Band huddle
It's Prudence's birthday soon and we're going to throw her a surprise party
Cha-ching has money saved from the last gig
Party time!
Before the party starts, we need to buy a few things
We have $200 in the bank account of Cha-ching
Buy party supplies to throw this excellent bash
Gotta go electronic and it's done in a flash
Pepper booked the DJ on her Dad's credit card
There's a cost to this that we can't disregard
It's easy to lose track of cash we've splashed
Don't forget there's a bill that will have to be paid
Invisible. Invisible money traveling down the wire
Invisible. Invisible money making the bill go higher and higher
Final touches are on to make the party feel wow
Tunes? Buy now
Food? Buy now
Lights? Buy now now
Invitations gone out by phone and by text
For less than $200 the party is next
Oh what a night, we had an excellent time
Our $200 bought all that was fine
We partied so hard with all the whistles and frills
Then along with the memories arrived the bill
What? We owe how much?
A $150 more, how did this happen?
But we have $15 cash left over, we totally stuck to the budget of $200

Did you really? I don't think so

How did you pay for the DJ?

Credit card. There's invisible charges there Pepper.

The invitations? Our phones. There's invisible charges there too.

You've spent almost $200 cash plus $150

Right everyone, hand them over. No more spending invisible money until we've paid what we owe

But how are we going to pay what we owe?

Ok, we don't have enough money in the bank, so the bank will pay our bills for now.

But every month they will charge us interest for lending us what we don't have.

So we'll have to work to pay it off as quickly as possible.

Invisible. Invisible money made the bill go higher.

Invisible. Invisible money added interest adds more money.

We did it Cha-ching. We've paid off our debt.

Party time. Oh. Pepper.
